Not illustrated. 1881 Excerpt: .in want of pure air, and by other hygienic instrumentalities, Dr. Stetson effectually prevents ho cholera on his farm. He is never troubled by it, even in the seasons during which it rages most destructively around him. His methods with respect to this matter are the result of his knowledge of comparative physiology and pathology, and are well worth the careful study of hog breeders and raisers through the country. Extract from an article prepared for publication by Dr. Stetson. Since the foregoing was written some new-fangled notions have come to the surface that demand attention. First comes France, with an edict prohibiting the importation of American pork; their savans have just discovered that there may be trichina? in American pork, which would render it unfit for human food. Since this edict has been promulgated an attack of trichinous disease has broken out in their own country, and from eating the raw flesh of French fattened swine. The truth of the matter is, that trichina are occasionally found in swine and other animals in all parts of the flobe. Now the remedy, or specific rather, is well understood by all civilized people, his parasite is effectually destroyed and rendered innocuous by submitting meat containing them to the boiling point of water. This cooks the parasite, and no flesh of any kind is safe to be used as human food until its temperature has thus been raised. Trichinae have been found in the flesh of the ox,...
