In enlarging, the preventive of this hardening of gradation is to illuminate the negative by light which is completely scattered beforehand. M. Callier does this by dispensing with the condenser and placing a sheet of opal glass in contact with the negative. From this brief description it will be understood that, apart from the quality of the paper, perfect diffusion of the light is a factor in making enlargements of contrast corresponding with that of the negative, which may-account for the efficiency of the little Kodak Illuminator designed for enlarging from small negatives. It is also, no doubt, for the same reason, a reliable means of avoiding over-emphasis of retouching marks on nega-tives, or of the relief of carbon transparencies, when enlarging either of these. In enlarging by artificial light with Braes18 bought or home-made apparatus, other than condenser lanterns, the illumination is diffused, as a rule, partly by reflection, partly by transmission. The two together are so effective that it is possible to include also the direct rays from the lightsource as, for example, in the illuminator for the Brownie enlarger. Remember here that the effectiveness of the light by reflection depends on the whiteness and mattness of the reflector: more on these than upon its shape. Makers of some apparatus suggest that a matt reflector of paraboloid curve sends parallel rays through...
