These samples were 2,359 in number. After being collected from the schools, they were sent to New York and each sample was rated by three competent judges in the offices of the Division of Education of the Russell Sage Foundation. The Ayres Handwriting Scale was used in making these ratings. This scale is a device for measuring the quality of children's handwriting in definite, quantitative terms. It consists of a long sheet of paper on which are reproduced samples of handwriting ranging from very poor to excellent and the samples are so selected that the step upwards in quality from the poorest writing to the next better one, the one above that, and so on, are all equal. Some idea of how this scale is used may be gained from the illustration on this page which reproduces very small specimens of writing rated by this scale as of qualities ranging from 20 to 90. The original scale was developed from more than 18,000 careful measurements of the writing of pupils in the four upper +o 7WVaXc TO (Xt Mma/tth-hostMzcAtcL Xtfo Samples Of Children s Handwriting Rated As Qualities 20 To 90 By Measuring Scale grades of some 40 cities in all parts of the country.
