Common light consists of undulations, in which the vibrations of each particle are in the plane perpendicular to the wave s motion. The polarization of light is the resolution of each vibration into two; one parallel to a given plane passing through the direction of the wave s motion, and the other perpendicular to that plane, which become in certain cases the origin of waves that travel in different directions. When we are able to separate one of these from the other, we say that the light is polarized. Or, in simpler language, we would say, when the light of the sun is reflected from certain bodies at particular angles, according to the nature of those bodies (as glass at an angle of 56 45), or by transmission through a plate of tourmaline, and also through doubly refractive crystals (as carbonate of lime), and these bodies are turned round, the...
